

Abstract

A process for the preparation of α -amino acids by hydrolysis of hydantoins in the presence of water and at least one metallic oxide under conditions such that all the starting materials are completely dissolved in the water as a result of high pressure and high temperature and only one further phase is present in the reactor in addition to the metallic oxide phase.

LIT/813585.1